

ABSTRACT

A database management system utilizing a limit engine to provide ranked search results in response to search queries directed to said database that include database data that matches the specific database user query as well as data that is within a programmable range of data relevant and responsive to said search queries. The invention also comprises a method for providing ranked database search query results according to similarity of database objects to search query criteria, within a programmable range of deviation.

1004683 102604